

Features of engaging storytelling and reading aloud

Reading aloud should be a dialogue with your audience, not a performance.

- Make the story the primary focus, not your skills as a reader.
- Be aware of your audience's engagement and respond to it.
- Include interactivity and choice in reading experiences.
- Encourage discussion about the books you are reading.
- Remember that children may engage in different ways.
- Build on energy and excitement by linking back to the story.

Share a book or story with a group of children with a focus on the following:

- Aim to make your reading session a dialogue with your audience by checking in with your listeners regularly, asking for their opinions and comments, and involving them fully with the reading experience.
- Build in an element of choice in your story or book selection.
- Think about accessibility and engagement, can you adapt provision to engage all children? For example, allowing a child to illustrate the story, or encouraging them to act out scenes with toys or puppets.
- Facilitate discussion about the story before, during and after reading.
- Respond to energy with positivity and direct it back to the story.

Record your reflections on the levels of engagement from your audience.

Did this dialogic reading style feel different? How did listeners respond?
